Absent Student Strips:

If a student doesn't show up to your class, it's a good idea to leave a note for your Korean counterpart as he or she may not know that the student hadn't come. Failure by the Korean teacher to relay this information to the parents could create some friction, as the parents could become justifiably upset when they discover that their child didn't show up to class and their whereabouts were unknown.

Leaving these notes helps your co-teachers stay informed and on top of their duties. It also goes a long way towards creating an atmosphere of teamwork in the office. You may not need these everyday, but it's good to have a few around when you do. This small gesture is sure to be greatly appreciated.
